

Predeparture Passenger Baggage Inspection Notice For Travelers from Puerto Rico to the U.S. Mainland

American agriculture is under constant threat of attack from countless enemies. These enemies are often microscopic and include plant pests and diseases. Every traveler, including those traveling from Puerto Rico to the U.S. Mainland, may unknowingly carry these hitchhikers that could seriously damage American agriculture across U.S. borders.

All traveler baggage moving from Puerto Rico to the U.S. mainland is subject to predeparture inspection. These inspections take place prior to departure at the airport by inspectors from the United States Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS). Please be prepared to open and close your own baggage.

If you have any agricultural items with you, please tell the inspector. Failure to do so can result in delays and fines up to $1,000.
